Investor portfolio management reaches new levels as Computershare upgrades Investor Centre platform for Australia and New Zealand

Melbourne – 26 February 2014 Computershare Limited (ASX: CPU) announced today that it has upgraded its Investor Centre platform in Australia and New Zealand.

The free online portfolio management tool, used by more than 1.1 million securityholders in Australia and New Zealand, now makes it easier for investors to locate important information quickly.

Scott Cameron, Regional Director of Australia and New Zealand, said the new site's user-friendly interface is world class:

"We have created a cutting-edge user experience – with a clean design, more intuitive navigation and enhanced security protocols. Today's announcement means that investors will find it even easier to access and manage their information online."

The results of extensive research with users locally and globally drove the platform's design, features and usability, with the overall aim of best meeting the needs of the modern investor. The research findings helped refine the different needs of users – whether they visit frequently to view their investments or just occasionally, to easily update their details when moving house or quickly obtain tax related information.

With the upgraded site, investors can quickly and easily review their portfolio, update personal information, access tax documents and more, while benefitting from Investor Centre's industry leading data security features.

Glenn Seaye, Managing Director of Computershare Technology Services Oceania, said that Computershare is continuously working to improve the online service experience for listed companies and their investors:

"We launched the first Investor Centre platform for Australia and New Zealand investors in 1998, and since then our annual R&D spend (USD 67.9 million in FY2013) has produced a stream of first-to-market features, including the expansion of the platform's capability for those who use mobile devices to manage their investments."
